Bio

Fonna Forman is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of California San Diego, founding co-director of the UCSD Center on Global Justice and the UCSD / BLUM Cross-Border Initiative. She is a political theorist best known for her revisionist work on Adam Smith, recuperating the ethical, spatial, social, public and urban dimensions of his political economy. Current work focuses on theories and practices of global justice as they manifest at local and regional scales, and the role of civic participation in strategies of equitable urbanization. Present sites of investigation include Bogota and Medellín, Colombia; Ukraine; the Palestinian territories; and the San Diego-Tijuana border region. Forman has just completed a volume of collected essays (with Amartya Sen) on critical interventions in global justice theory, and papers on 'municipal cosmopolitanism' and "political leadership in Latin America'. She is presently writing a book on Adam Smith in Latin America. She is co-investigating with Teddy Cruz a Ford Foundation-funded study of citizenship culture in the San Diego-Tijuana border region, in collaboration with the Bogota-based NGO, Corpovisionarios. She is Vice-Chair of the University of California Climate Solutions Group and co-editor of Bending the Curve: 10 Scalable Solutions for Carbon and Climate Neutrality (The University of California report on carbon neutrality). From 2013-14 she was special advisor on civic and urban initiatives to the City of San Diego, and with Teddy Cruz led the development of its Civic Innovation Lab. She presently consults on social and economic rights for the NYU Global Citizenship Commission, led by the Rt Hon. Gordon Brown, reporting to the United Nations General Assembly on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in the 21st Century.

Forman is an advocate for deepening university-community research partnerships, and currently serves on the advisory boards of the UCSD Global Health Initiative, the Climate Neutrality Task Force, the Urban Studies and Planning Program, IICAS, the Global Health major, the UC Carbon Neutrality Task Force, FF21 (Food and Fuel for the 21st Century) and the Center for Tomorrow's California. From 1999-2001 she was Assistant Editor of Political Theory, and is currently Editor of the Adam Smith Review.

Civic Engagement Projects

Civic San Diego Hilltop RFP: A new model of equitable and sustainable urban development, and energy independence, rooted in the underserved neighborhoods of Encanto in South East San Diego, to improve quality of life for its diverse demographics. A creative community-public-private partnership among Groundwork San Diego, RED Office, UC San Diego, and the San Diego Unified School District, that integrates housing with education and commercial use oriented toward the social, economic and environmental wellbeing of the community.

Civic Innovation Lab: In 2012-13 was consultant to the City of San Diego to design and co-direct the Civic Innovation Lab, a new project inside the mayor's office that convened the best urban thinking across sectors to explore new civic engagement strategies, produce innovative public space projects,advocate for urban policy transformations to promote equitable urban growth in underserved neighborhoods across the border region, and coordinate cross-border municipal collaboration with the City of Tijuana.

Bi-National Citizenship Culture Survey A Center on Global Justice-led project funded by the Ford-Foundation in collaboration with the municipalities of San Diego and Tijuana, designed to measure shared interests and public trust across the border region, as the basis for a new Bi-national Vision Plan between the two municipalities. The survey instrument has been designed in partnership with the Bogota-based NGO, Corpovisionarios, who consult cities across the world on issues of citizenship culture and municipal intervention.

Political Equator 5 Meeting: The Political Equator Meetings began in 2006, in collaboration with local community-based non-profit organizations on both sides of the border. The 5th meeting, in Summer 2016, will be a major cross-border event to communicate the results of the Binational Citizenship Culture survey.

UCSD Cross-Border Community Station: A central project of the BLUM Initiative is the UCSD Community Stations Project – and the development of community-based outreach hubs in marginalized neighborhoods throughout the region, supplementing the UCSD classroom experience with experiential field research on poverty and diversity. I co-direct the Cross-Border Community Station with Teddy Cruz, coordinating its funding, curriculum, internships, infrastructure and technology. The Cross-Border Community Station is comprised of two field stations that straddle the US-Mexico border: one in San Ysidro (the site of the border check-point on the US side) and the other in the Los Laureles canyon, an informal settlement of 85,000 people on the periphery of Tijuana.

Chollas Gathering Place: Co-directed a collaboration among the Civic Innovation Lab, the UCSD / BLUM Cross-Border Initiative and the non-profit Groundwork San Diego, that in Summer 2014 transformed a blighted vacant lot in the Encanto neighborhood into a public gathering space, that will in the coming years be programmed by local community organizations in collaboration with the UCSD Blum Initiative and the UCSD Urban Studies and Planning Program, and become the site of the next UCSD / BLUM community station.

Los Laureles Community Center and Skate-park: The BLUM Initiative is presently designing and securing funding for the construction of a new Community Center and Skate-park in the Los Laureles canyon, which will serve as a BLUM classroom, field-station and health clinic for UCSD researchers and students, as well as a hub for arts and culture programming to promote political agency, environmental literacy and economic development in the canyon. An adjacent skate-park will become a site for youth programming, and will double as a water management system, harvesting rainwater for developing urban agricultural projects.
