This course examines selected texts in Marxist and post-Marxist political philosophy with a focus on a particular theme. This quarter our theme will be the relationship between man as an individual with an identity as such and man in society. This theme will allow us to address issues concerning alienation and consciousness, as well as the role of ideology in forging man's identity as an individual, as a member of a class, national state, or other collective entity, and as what Marx referred to as a "species-being" identifying with universal humanity.

In Part I of the course, we will establish the problématique that is the object of our inquiry. We will begin by examining these issues in the work of Jean-Jacques Rousseau, G. W. F. Hegel, Karl Marx, and Friedrich Engels. We then move to see how these issues were addressed in the work of V. I. Lenin, Rosa Luxemburg, and Antonio Gramsci, as leaders in revolutionary movements in developing or unevenly developing societies. We then consider the thought of Georg Lukács as a link to the fuller consideration of ideology in more industrialized societies. In Part II of the course, we address critical treatments of organized Marxism, Leninism, and Marxism-Leninism itself as ideological systems. Such critical treatments will be drawn from within the Western Marxist tradition, as well as from the writings of non-Western Marxists. Finally, in Part III we will examine the relationship between ideology, the individual, and society in advanced industrial societies, through the writings of Louis Althusser, Herbert Marcuse, Jürgen Habermas, and others.

During the second part of the quarter, students will be required to complete a paper, a thought piece of about 15 pages. The paper should be written on the basis of materials assigned for this course, although students are welcome to draw on outside readings. Papers are due on Wednesday, June 16th by 12:00 a.m. (midnight) by email to germaine.hoston@gmail.com. To join the course discussion board, simply send an email from your preferred email address to: marxist_political_philosophy_2011@yahoogroups.com.

This seminar does not presume familiarity with Western political philosophy but not necessarily with Marxism. Students who feel that they need additional background should complete the background readings indicated below within the first two weeks of the quarter.

Below is the schedule of readings and discussion topics for the course. Students are expected to complete all readings in advance of the date on which discussion of them is indicated. Readings available for purchase in the University Bookstore are indicated with an asterisk. Items that have been placed on reserve are indicated with the letter "R" in parentheses.

PLEASE NOTE: So that the first session will be productive, students are required to have completed and/or reviewed Rousseau's First and Second Discourses and Social Contract for the first class meeting.

FINAL WRITTEN ASSIGNMENT

Please write an essay of approximately 15 double-spaced typed pages on the topic below. This is not a research paper, but a thought piece. You are welcome to consult material not assigned for this course in answering the question, but it is possible to do an excellent thought piece solely on the basis of materials used in this course. Be sure to cite materials copiously in your essay. Your paper is due by email to germaine.hoston@gmail.com on Wednesday, June 16th by midnight.

Two centuries after the French Revolution, the world saw the rapid demise of the Stalinist systems in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union that had been in place since the 1940s and 1950s, and the challenge to the new leaders in these societies in constructing new functional democratic socialist societies has been formidable indeed. In the past, when the former Soviet Union, Poland, and other communist societies departed from the Stalinist model in reforming their political arrangements (let us leave economic reforms aside for the moment), their actions were roundly denounced by "conservative" Stalinist leadership--as well as by "conservative" advocates of capitalist economics--as "bourgeois" actions which have no place and could never survive in a political system inspired by Marx's vision of proletarian socialist revolution. How might the writings by the Marxist philosophical community that you have read in this course be used to challenge such claims (and those who make them) in terms of the Marxist categories of "consciousness", "ideology", and "humanism"?
